Brewer Will Direct Popular Comedy

Volpone, the McGill English Department's first offering of the season, will open tonight in Moyse Hall. The Ben Jonson comedy of immorality in Renaissance Venice is enjoying considerable popularity this year, and the McGill production will be followed by a French version in a few month's time.

Double Function

Griffith Brewer, a Montreal actor, will be performing in the double function of director and set designer in his first assignment for the McGill English Department. Mr. Brewer has created a series of settings which suggest 16th century Venice without actually depicting it. He has taken his inspiration from Italian set designs of the period, and has attempted to suggest an echo of St. Mark's square and the Doge's palace — the violent pinks and mauves reflected in the water, and the high domed ceilings of the architecture of the period.

Byrd In Title Role

Christopher Byrd will play the title role of Volpone, the wily fox whose greatest pleasure is to entice others into making fools of themselves. Mr. Byrd was seen as the bluff soldier Benedick in the English Department's production of Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing" last year.

The part of Mosca, Volpone's servant and parasite, will be played by George Sorger.

Voltore, Corbaccio, and Corvino, the three old birds of prey each of whom is deceived by Volpone into thinking that he is to be the heir to the fox's considerable fortune, will be portrayed by Kenneth Heard, Ian Heron, and Marvin Bartell.

Jane Anders will be seen as Corvino's young and lovely wife, Cella, whom he forces to submit to Volpone's amatory advances in order to further his hopes of becoming Volpone's heir.

Bonario, son to Corbaccio, will be played by Peter White, and others in the cast will include Penelope Farndale and Phyllis Smyth as Judges. Guards and crowd will consist of Christopher Schon, Dmitri Spelvin, Hugh Sproule, Phyllis Smyth, Leonard Rosmarin, and Beverley Ann Rosen.

Incidental music and the accompaniment to Volpone's song "Cella" have been composed especially for the McGill production by Barry McLean.

Costumes for Volpone have been designed by Althea Douglas. Lighting will be by Creighton Douglas, and technical production by Gordon Dorey.

"Volpone" will be presented at Moyse Hall, McGill University on December 6, 7, and 8.

28 New 'Keys', Red Wings — 40 p.c. Of Campus Vote

By LIZ GILLESPIE

Approximately 40% of all eligible students voted in yesterday's election, choosing SEC, Women's Union, Scarlet Key and Red Wing members for the coming year. Last year, if calculations were done correctly, 58% of the campus cast ballots.

Architecture led the faculties with 77% of its members voting. Dentistry followed with 70% and then came Physio and Graduate Nurses, 65%; Commerce, 62%; and Arts and Science, 36%. Engineering and Law brought up the rear with a 31% and a 27% vote respectively.

SEC

David Freedman and Stuart Smith were chosen as Arts and Science representatives while Lou Donolo was triumphant in Engineering. The Architects elected Lloyd Sankey as their SEC representative. Ron Jones was chosen by the Dentists.

Lorraine Brender, Physiotherapy and Physical Education; Taylor Carlin, Commerce; Don Johnston, Law; Scott Little, Medicine; and Thomas Miles, Divinity and Music; have been acclaimed to the Council.

WOMEN'S UNION

Mickey Brown was chosen as Vice-President of the Women's Union. Non-resident Members-at-large will be Anita Jonas and Val Chaykowsky while Andrea Lough will act as first year representative on the MWSAA. Nancy Zinck and Mary Ogden have been acclaimed as Resident Member-at-large and first year Women's Union representative respectively.

RED WINGS

Seven girls were elected to the Red Wing Society. They are: Third Year; Lorna Houston, Sheila McCormick and Judy Rochester; Second Year; Judy Darling, Shirley Nadell, and Janet Turnbull; Physiotherapy; Ann Kindersly.

SCARLET KEY

Twenty-one men were elected to the Scarlet Key Society. They are:

Arts and Science: Group A — John Bennet, David Freedman, Norman Samuels and Stuart Smith. Group B — Kim Kertland, Alick Ryder, and Perry Cohen.

Engineering: Group A — Alex Bible, Tony Skinner, Vito Volterra, and Bill Wilson. Group B — Don Ferrier and John Wickenden.

Commerce: Group A — Gordon Merrick, Peter Monk and Don Wright. Group B — Donald Budge and John Kaye.

Law: Yves Fortier, David Wadsworth.

Architecture: Hans Etenman.

COMMERCE CLASS PRESIDENTS

58% of the School of Commerce cast ballots for class Presidents. The heaviest vote, 75%, was made by first year students. Elected are: First year — Peter Cundhill, Second — Sylvia Shaw, Third — Gerry Swarts and Fourth year permanent class president — Peter Reid.

McGill Host To Laval On January Exchange Weekend

Whether you like to discuss Provincial Policy toward Quebec Universities, minority rights, culture, or even Jean Beliveau you may learn some new points of view from the Laval students who will be the guests of this university, the weekend of January 17.

On this date, members of the various parts of the executive and clubs at Laval university will arrive in Montreal to spend an exchange weekend here.

The exchange committee urges all students to meet with these visitors so that through such an acquaintance a better understanding and better relations will be established with our French-Canadian neighbours.

The program for the weekend includes attending lectures and participation in panel discussions and model Parliament. These meetings are open to all students.

SEC Banquet

Other parts of the program includes a banquet given by the S.E.C., which will be attended by the S.E.C. members, and chairmen of different committees, entertainment by the Folk Music Club and the Flying Carpet and a tour of a Scope sponsored art Exhibit.

On the weekend of Feb. 9, Laval has invited McGill for an exchange weekend in Quebec City. Thirty-five students will be chosen from the campus on the basis of the interest they show in this weekend and the application forms submitted.

Those who are interested on working on the Laval weekend committee should contact Nundi Gewurz at RE. 3-9873.

Campus Executives

All organizations on campus which have not as yet been in touch with the Annual regarding executive pictures must do so immediately. All such pictures must be taken before Christmas and no consideration will be given to any organization which does not make arrangements for its executive picture immediately.

Editorial

Keep It Simple

The LONDON OBSERVER recently printed an article on modern euphemisms or more bluntly the art of bull. No longer do people decide things — they come to a decision. Mr. Eden declared "We are not at war with Egypt — we are in a state of armed conflict". This inability to call a spade a spade, to circumlocute, to get away from the pure simple English that characterizes all great prose indicates one aspect of our expanding civilization. We have to clothe inadequacy of knowledge in a superabundance of words.

Faced by the complexity of modern life, of in-groups who speak in esoteric jargon, many people give up. Others spread their knowledge thinly behind a smokescreen of a minimum number of technical terms. This of course can be delightfully humorous. An applicant for a job when faced with the embarrassing question about the occupation of his father stated that he had held the Chair of Applied Electricity at a state institution, rather than say that he had been electrocuted.

A return is needed to direct, uncluttered language. Phrases like "terminological inexactitude" may be clever in Parliament where it is unsafe to accuse a person of lying, but too much ordinary speech and writing, especially on the student level, is loaded with obscurities, pedantic phrases, and other neo-technical jargon that sound pompous. Technical terms are necessary, but there is an increasing tendency to clothe simple issues in complex verbiage.

One of the greatest pieces of literature ever written is the St. James Version of the Holy Bible. Clear, lucid, it leaves a lasting impression, by building up and beautifully using simple words and phrases. It says what it means in words that have rung clear down the centuries.

U. S. Collegiate Poll

Desegregation Issue

MINNEAPOLIS. (ACP) — In general, the policy of our federal government has been one of "hands off" in relation to school desegregation problems involving violence, disorder, etc. The administration prefers to leave law enforcement to local government, as indicated by the use of state police and or state guardsmen in Tennessee, Kentucky, Texas and other spots.

Associated Collegiate Press HMS attempted to get collegiate opinion on the issue by asking the following question of a representative national cross-section of college students:

Do you feel that the federal government is handling the school desegregation problem properly? The results: Men Women Total
Yes 38% 33% 36%
No 51% 53% 52%
Undecided 11% 14% 12%

Students thinking the federal government is not handling the problem properly are generally split into two camps, those believing the government is moving too fast and forcing the issue, and those feeling the government is dragging its feet and avoiding its duty. Some believe the problem should be left to the states, while others feel education is the answer.

"We should have a more gradual process" is the opinion of a sophomore at South Georgia College (Douglas), while a freshman at the College of Physicians and Surgeons (San Francisco) feels the answer is "evolution, not revolution."

The other side of the argument is represented by a freshman at University of Denver (Denver, Co) who says: "The federal government is not taking a firm Court decision," while a University of Maryland (College Park, Md.) junior states bluntly: "There should be more enforcement."

"States rights" is championed by a junior coed at Wake Forest College who feels the issue should be left up to each state to decide."

Students who feel the federal government is handling the problem properly generally reflect the opinion of a Yakima Valley Junior College (Yakima, Wash.) sophomore who says: "They're doing as good as they can." Some students, however, comment that the "slow way" is the proper way.

Other students support the government's position for other reasons. A junior at Syracuse University feels the government is proceeding properly on a "complex jurisdictional problem."

A University of Maryland graduate student feels that no one can analyze the problem now, "only time will tell."

Protests Segregation

'STRANGLED BY TRADITION'

By R. L. MORTON

Man's first passion was a grunt. With evolution, he has molded and shaped his emotions with color and song and speech. Sing we must, else go mad. Speak we must, else the throat choke and burst with silent truths. Speak we must, before its too late, Listen.

I am ashamed to be called a "Southerner." By biological accident, I, like most of you, am a native South Carolinian. With you, I am a student at the University of South Carolina, a rather large school, admirably progressive in everything except the desire to forget the past.

Throttled by this slavish and solidary stigma, we are not attempting to free ourselves. Unconsciously, we have been smothered and strangled with tradition; the so-called "Southern" tradition, a backward looking and odious attitude appropriately attributed only to the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

For several years, I have been a page in the State Legislature. They, too, form a rather large school. And this is a monumental session in 1956. Arrested by the decision of "nine old men" on the United States Supreme Court, they are intent on circumventing movements which would abolish segregation of the races in our state.

Southern Governors and legislators have been the embarrassing sound tracks for the South. Tempered by custom, they speak with weighty, obstreperous and irrational voices.

Never have they spoken for me and some of you. Never could they speak for those who feel as we do.

Being a Southerner, my decrying segregation is worse than damning a venerable old god. But most gods are merciful and understanding; many Southerners are not. Most gods are forgiving and broadminded; most state legislators are not.

Twelve miles below Columbia, on a bluff overlooking the Congaree Swamp, I was born.

Clearly I remember racing through haystacks, over the holy pastures green and blithe with the confusion of youth. The fields sang to us, and our bodies ripened in the sun.

My only playmate was Fred, a Negro, and nothing I cared about the color of his skin. He was as I, and every moment was merry.

Then, one day, my visiting Auntie, an enormous woman who smeared lipstick on her forehead when she smiled, saw us drinking from the spring. With all the affected dignity of a Southern lady, she informed me that Freddy was a "nigger" and should never be caught drinking from that spring again. Freddy cowered away dumbfoundedly. I was abashed.

Auntie died two years later, and both Freddy and I watched the funeral less than a hundred yards from the spring. There I discovered suddenly not sorrow, but hatred. I wanted to kick dirt in her embalmed face, a face representative of all the ignorance and superstitions of generations past.

But Freddy cried, and all the fears of his young, dark world cried pity, not hatred. Now Freddy is a part of the Korean hillside, and he died for the grace of people like Auntie. But Auntie's temperament did not die with her. Her stupidity is reflected and echoed in every Citizens' Council in the South today.

This America is: Sing to me of the sunlight of the human spirit pouring through open windows.

This the South is: Slur to me your syllables of interposition.

This America is: Show, don't dream to me of human dignity.

This the South is: Move to the rear of the bus.

GEORGIANS RALLY IN THIRD TO TIE INTER BRAVES 4-4

By FRED SELIGMAN

A third period goal with less than five minutes remaining by Pat Craig gave Sir George William's College a 4-4 tie with the Intermediate McGill Braves last night at MWS. The tally came on a goal-mouth scramble on passes from Pete Courtemanche and Neil Maize.

The contest was a fast hard-fought affair. There were fourteen penalties in the game, all for minor infractions. McGill picked up eight of these.

The Braves started out fast and had wide territorial advantage in the first canto. Gordie Merritt scored McGill's first goal on a sizzling shot from 15 feet that had the Georgian goaler Murray Steinberg beaten all the way. The pass came from Jamieson who had squirted around the Georgian defence.

The second period started with two Braves in the penalty box. The teams had just returned to full strength when Marcel Fourcier gave McGill a two goal lead on a slap-shot from the blue line. The goal was unassisted.

The McGill lead was shortlived for a minute later Walter Goulych banged in two goals within seven seconds.

Meagher's boys regained their two goal margin by the end of the period on goals by Irvin and Armstrong taking advantage of weak goal-tending by Phil Harvey who had replaced Steinberg at the start of the second period.

Mike Lidsky took over the Sir George goaling chores in the third frame and turned in the club's best performance.

John Foolkes made the score 4-3 in favour of McGill when he hit paydirt on a pass from Doffey. McGill was short handed at the time. Then came Craig's game tying goal after McGill's John Baziw had hit the Georgian goal-post on a low drive.
